

Introduction

Adult Sibling Alienation Syndrome (ASAS) refers to patterned behaviors in adulthood where one sibling restricts, distorts, or undermines another sibling's relationship with an aging parent or the broader family system. This assessment tool is an educational resource designed to help individuals identify patterns of adult sibling alienation. It is not a diagnosis, not a clinical instrument, and not a legal evaluation. It is an assessment tool developed to help identify patterns of behavior associated with ASAS

This instrument is intended to support awareness, and early identification of relational patterns that can contribute to family conflict and estrangement. It can shine light on behaviors associated with the structural disruption of systems meant to protect and empower seniors during the season of life where vulnerability and dependency can put aging parents at risk of harm or exploitation.

Section C - Triangulation & Alliance Formation: / 32

Section D - Social & Emotional Exclusion: / 32

Section E - Structural Family Impact: / 32

Total ASAS Score: / 160

0-20 - Minimal Indicators

Few or no alienation-related behaviors are present.

21-60 - Mild Indicators

Some patterns appear occasionally; may reflect tension, miscommunication, or early-stage exclusion.

61-100 - Moderate Indicators

Multiple domains show consistent patterns; alienation behaviors may be affecting relationships and communication.

101-140 - Significant Indicators

Alienation behaviors are frequent, patterned, and likely impacting family structure, caregiving, and emotional connection.

141-160 - Severe Indicators

Alienation behaviors are pervasive across domains; strong likelihood of structural family disruption, estrangement, or long-term relational harm.
